To whomever reads this file,

London is a self-taught web and graphic designer working in the freelance economy since 2011. He has experience collaborating with NPO's, small businesses, and personal leadership coaches to develop brand guides, websites, and strategies for online search domination. He continues to grow his skills as an entrepreneur and is passionate about making connections between people, places, and ideas. Make no mistake, he is filled with dangerous ideas.

For most of his professional life he has worked behind a computer screen but, now, he is determined to exchange his sedentary lifestyle for chance to live and work in the great outdoors.

Spending a significant time backpacking New Zealand, working with youth across many cultures, and constantly consuming leadership development books makes him a prime candidate for this position. When he's not working, or leaving reviews for local cafes, he often finds secluded places to journal in his hammock. But don't be fooled by his laid back nature, he is very observant of the world around him, and loves to surprise people with his arsenal of random facts.

Above all, he desires to practice and share principals of personal leadership, radical joy and tales of his travels.
